Hate allows us to define clearly who is in our group and who is not. When an individual or group feels tension, and they don't know how to resolve it, they seek out a scapegoat, express their hatred for it, and then expel it from their world. Once the scapegoat is removed, the individual or group experiences a feeling of unity and peace.

But I Liked My Real Job - Managing For People Who Hate ...

Somehow the actual day-to-day (read: boring) managerial responsibilities were hard for me to focus on. I like taking action. Although there is certainly more to it, managing is largely about being the nerve center and making sure action and communication happens all around you. And then taking action when some extra oomph is needed.
